February 9, 2012

Each spring parents of children receiving special education services are sent a survey to rate how well they feel their child's school is facilitating parent involvement as a way to improve services and results for children with disabilities. Districts receive the results of this survey, but what do these results mean and what do you do with them?

Join us for a round table discussion on the parent involvement survey, strategies to increase the response rate and for using the survey data in your school or district. Come learn new information about family-school partnerships in special education, connect with others and get new ideas!
